gates of Thebes to celebrate the return of the victorious Egyptian general was stunning. It was gorgeous with color and action. The ballet, with Odette Valery as the premier dancer, excelled itself. The sextette was sung vigor ously and the chorus was sonorous. The stage band and the orchestra fairly crashed through the score, and Campanini led with fine fervor. As a matter of fact, he could have cut down the brasses by one half and bettered the effect. All the scenes were well set, the stage management was good and the lighting, especially in the two views o the Temple of Vulcan, was excellent. Agostinelli was a picturesque Aida, ef-
